Legato Founder, Matilda came to lighting in a slightly unusual way. Having worked at House & Garden and The World of Interiors magazines for years, she took a brief hiatus from the industry before returning to work at TAT London in 2021. A chance encounter with ceramics shortly after saw Matilda learning all she could about the craft and so began the initial concepts of our first four designs. Each Legato design is first created from clay before being adapted to cast composite. Clay offers movement, undulation and imperfection, all things that thrive in nature and what we look to imitate.

Legato will always be looking for more sustainable practices, because protecting the world we live in for the future is as important as giving back to nature now.

In the future, they hope to run rewilding and other conservation projects across the UK, but for now, we are working with a conservation team local to the South Cotswolds area who are restoring areas of ancient woodland that have been ravaged by Ash Dieback.

In the past three years, Ash Dieback has destroyed 80% of the ash trees across the country, which has resulted in major losses within ancient woodlands and their ecosystems, which nowadays only cover 2.5% of the UK.

They are helping to replenish these precious woodlands with native trees, such as the English Oak, Hazel, and Yew.

With every Legato lamp sold profits are put towards planting a tree.

Finding inspiration in nature is a tale old as time, but it's a good one. The lamps capture nature in a sculptural way that celebrates its unique form and movement.

The link between us and nature has, for millennia past, promoted health, wellbeing and created calmness throughout our lives and our homes. Lighting has a similar effect and has the capability to define the atmosphere and provide the finishing touch within an interior space.

Adding a soft, warm light Legato lamps will enhance the shapes and shadows across the bases, further adding to the magic of the lamp.

Legato creates original lighting that has been handcrafted by artisan in London.

Showcasing the natural, textured, flowing forms found in the world around us in unique and beautiful ways, each Legato lamp takes approximately six to eight weeks to make.

To achieve the unique shapes of the Legato lamp, the creative process involves hand painting cast composite into identical moulds, which allows for their intricate finish.

Once the structure of the lamp is formed, each lamp receives its decorative finishes in the South London studio, bringing to life the unique textures, shapes and shadows synonymous with Legato, making every lamp a piece of art within itself.
